WEDDINGS

weddings
When looking for image-spiration for your upcoming wedding, there's no better way to convey those eclectic table centres that you've just dreamed up, or that wafty bit of draping that will transform the atmosphere in your dining tent, than building a moodboard of reference points. That is why, in the last 6 years, pictorial-filing-assistant-extraordinaire; Pinterest, has been on the rise and is regularly used to share ideas between bridesmaids, mother-in-law and groom.

Wedding case studies

We relish working with a bride who has a Pinterest moodboard of collated décor ideas they would like to use or their special day, as it conveys quickly and easily their expectations of the look, feel and style they are aiming to achieve. Whether it be a barn, marquee, forest or their own home, by seeing what a bride is aiming to achieve allows us to either temper expectations (if budget and the desired-look aren't compatible) or enables us to turn the images into literal reality.

Here are the stories of three women who went a step further and approached us with one particular Pinterest image that they had focused on as inspiration for their entire décor plan; and how we went about making the inspiration a reality for these Pinterest Brides.

HANNAH & SIMON
Re-visiting Pythagorus' theorem

Louise Perry, a highly renowned event planner, contacted House of Hud with a quandary. Hannah had become rather attached to one image she had found on Pinterest: she wanted the ceiling drapes to fall into wall drapes, as seen in the image; which would have been easy to do in a smallish square marquee, however not quite so easy in the very large rectangular marquee she had set her heart on. According to Louise, a couple of other companies had said it couldn't be done and had declined the job! “I quickly had to brush up on Pythagorus’ theorem!” says Jeremy Fifield, Manager at House of Hud, explaining how he got around the technicalities.

The benefit of working with one image in particular is there is far less room for the bride’s vision to be lost in creative translation, as there is an instant benchmark to ensure that the team are always on track. “Just working with the picture, I set about hunting for the perfect match for the fabric, in texture and shade”, says Jeremy, “I took my time as I wanted it to look perfect for Hannah”. Although he had to make a couple of deviations along the way, to keep the wedding budget from soaring; “the end result was stunning and most importantly, Hannah loved it!”
Smriti Sinha
The orb specialists
Smriti contacted the team regarding dressing two rooms at the Shoreditch Studios. The reception and party studio needed to be colourful and contemporary with a nod to her Indian heritage. The second studio, used for dining, was to be light and modern and she’d taken inspiration for this from a Pinterest image of hanging glass orbs.

“We spent a while trying to source an affordable UK supplier for these little glass terrariums”, says Jeremy, “but as we were planning on hanging around 350, Smriti found a supplier herself to limit the cost, a factory in China!” However, there was a huge set-back in the delivery of the décor pièce de résistance, “when we received the boxes they were all making rather a worrying rattling sound; a sort of ‘hundreds of tiny shards of thin glass’ rattle!”. Jeremy continues, “They had been packed terribly and a lot of them were smashed to pieces!” Luckily, Smriti had forward planned and cleverly ordered more than might have been needed and so there were still over 350 survivors to use for the decoration.

Jeremy assembled a crack-team of orb hanging specialists. “It is rather a time consuming task to suspend hundreds of little orbs at different heights from a ceiling and it took us 6 hours to hang them all on the morning of the wedding!” With limited time at the venue, Jeremy and his team were really up against the clock, “In the last 30 minutes before the guests were due to arrive there were still caterers setting up the tables, us up ladders stringing the last of the orbs, the venue manager struggling with the projector and the florist hanging her flowers in a test tube installation on the exposed brick walls!” However, all’s well that ends well; “There was a general frenzied energy bouncing around the studio, but there is nothing quite like the feeling of finishing a tricky job perfectly, in the nick of time!”

It certainly was a perfect job, according to the bride Smriti, “I was lost for words when I walked into the venue. Jeremy and his team are magicians! The atmosphere they created was breath-taking; spectacular, whilst being intimate and warm. People kept coming up to me on the day and raving about everything - and we are still getting messages now!”

Zoe & Ian Chappell
A twinkling aisle
Thankfully, due to House of Hud’s wonderland warehouse of props, various lanterns, vases and other glass receptacles; they didn’t have to look to China to provide the stock for Zoe and Ian Chappell’s wedding.

It was a second wedding for them both and so rather than conjuring up anything too extravagant, they wanted to recreate something light and Wintery and yet warm. Zoe sent a Pinterest board indicating the general feel that she would like the team to recreate, but she had her heart set on one image in particular. A candle-lit aisle.

As the path to perfection never did run smooth, it wasn’t until the morning of the set-up that Jeremy and his team encountered a problem; “when laying out all chairs for the guests we found the aisle wasn’t as wide as we’d planned for, so the main concern during this set-up was hoping that we didn’t set the bride’s dress ablaze!” With Jeremy’s careful re-organisation, the only thing going off with a hitch was the bride and groom, and it was widely commented that the recreation was a resounding success. It seems Zoe agrees; in her words: “The venue looked so amazing, we can’t thank you enough.”

PARTY DECORATION

Using exquisite fabrics, lively lighting, creative drapes, unique ornaments and furniture; we can transform any space into any style or theme you may have in mind.

We will also share our trusted contacts within the events industry - including, amongst others: performers, party and wedding caterers, lighting experts, wedding-cake patisseries and florists - so you can harmonise and organise all aspects of your event, simultaneously.
DRAPING

Draping brings the space to life through texture and colour, while Voile and organza introduce movement and soften harsh ceilings and corners.

With our bespoke draping service anything is possible, whether you prefer a sumptuous environment or a simple and chic statement.
MARQUEE DRAPING

Any standard marquee can be transformed by dressing it with fabric, imaginative lighting and our statement furniture. We work closely with you to design the best décor plan for your structure in order to turn your vision into reality!
MARQUEE LINING CHOICES

We have access to the largest collection of exquisite marquee linings in the UK, thanks to our sister companies The Arabian Tent Company and The Pearl Tent Company. Choose from 8 beautiful and unique interiors; from classic tea party to bright and colourful party palaces. Each lining is handmade and can be fitted to adorn the walls and ceilings of any venue, to transform your indoor party into a magical tented event!

Another way of decorating the interior of a marquee extremely effectively is to hang décor from the ceiling (depending on the marquee) and some of the most effective ways of decorating like this is using paper lanterns, pompons and bunting which fills up the ceiling of the structure with colour and interest and makes for a captivating centre-piece as illustrated below.
Lighting is a key element of any event and it is paramount to us that we light each event perfectly. From ornate chandeliers, to warm white or coloured up-lighting, to be-jewelled and ambient Moroccan table lamps, to transforming trees and bushes into awe-inspiring features - we create a bespoke lighting plan to bring out the very best in your venue.

Framing doorways and windows with fabric can be an effective way to make a feature of them and bring the look of the entire venue together. Similarly, any unsightly wall space can easily be covered with well placed fabric.

Above is one of the photoshoot’s we worked on with Brides Magazine where we innovated an elegant chair drape for the Bride and Groom, and set up a lantern aisle and backdrop drapes to fit with their ‘white wedding’ theme. By incorporating subtle shade differences and using our whitewashed chairs, the overall look came together and had texture and depth as well as elegance.
